Scripps Networks Interactive hit with breach of contract suit over font software

August 21, 2014 10:21 AM

By Annie Cosby

A Cook County font software company is suing a media company it claims breached the terms of their user agreement by modifying its software.

Berthold Direct Corp. filed a lawsuit Aug. 8 in the Cook County Circuit Court against Scripps Networks Interactive Inc.

According to the complaint, Scripps in 2006 purchased a traditional end user license to use certain Berthold typeface font computer software programs, but breached the license by modifying the font software and utilizing it for external business use, both of which are forbidden by the user agreement.

Berthold is seeking termination of the license, damages and costs of suit. It is being represented in the case by attorneys Vincent L. DiTommaso, Peter S. Lubin and Andrew C. Murphy of DiTommaso Lubin P.C. in Oak Brook.

Cook County Circuit Court Case No. 2014L008346.

This is a report on a civil lawsuit filed in the Cook County Circuit Court. The details in this report come from an original complaint filed by a plaintiff. Please note, a complaint represents an accusation by a private individual, not the government. It is not an indication of guilt, and it only represents one side of the story.
