

Judge Certifies Nationwide Class in Lawsuit against Abercrombie & Fitch

A nationwide class has been certified in a lawsuit against Abercrombie & Fitch for allegedly voiding gift cards issued to customers as part of a 2009 winter holiday promotion despite the fact that the gift cards stated “No Expiration Date.” Class counsel, DiTommaso Lubin, P.C. and Schad, Diamond & Shedden, P.C., has created a website www.abercrombieclassaction.com where potential class members can obtain more information and review important documents and dates.

Chicago, IL (PRWEB) May 24, 2013 -- A judge in the Northern District of Illinois has certified a nationwide class in a class action lawsuit filed against Abercrombie & Fitch (case no.10-cv-04866). The lawsuit, filed by Tiffany Boundas through her attorneys DiTommaso Lubin, P.C. and Schad, Diamond & Shedden, P.C., alleges that Abercrombie and abercrombie kids issued $25 gift cards to customers as part of a 2009 in-store winter holiday promotion. Abercrombie then voided the gift cards a couple months later despite language on the cards that stated “No Expiration Date.” By doing so, the lawsuit contends, Abercrombie breached its contracts with customers. The lawsuit seeks a payment of the value of the gift cards that customers could not redeem as a result of Abercrombie’s actions. Abercrombie contends that more than $5 million is at issue in this lawsuit.

Copies of the Complaint, the judge's opinion certifying the class, and the Class Notice can be obtained by going to www.abercrombieclassaction.com.

The judge has set a July 20, 2013 deadline for class members to exclude themselves from the class. For more information and to learn other important dates in this case, please visit www.abercrombieclassaction.com.
